

This proposed regulation makes no distinction between Permanent Resident Aliens and those in the country temporarily on a visa.

The process for obtaining a green card requires the candidate to submit fingerprints along with the application which are then sent to the FBI for investigation. That being said, would it not follow that holders of green cards have already been subject to a background investigation and their fingerprints already be on file with the FBI and other law enforcement databases? Therefore would it not be that the additional checks from the TSA to be a duplication of efforts better spent elsewhere?

Respectfully

Robert Chambers